Rejection Coach: Demo Call Script

Two people read this aloud: one plays the Rep, one plays the Customer. Put the laptop mic near the speaker. Cards in pink boxes appear on screen; do not read them aloud.

Script 1: The main demo (about 2 minutes)

Rep: Hi, this is Sam from T-Mobile. Do you have a minute? I'm calling to see if your current plan still fits you.

Customer: Uh, sure. But honestly, I'm happy with my current plan.

> Card: Happy with my plan

Rep: That's good to hear. What do you use your phone for most?

Customer: Mostly streaming and maps.

> Card: They shared something. It points to real plan features, such as a plan that includes Netflix.

Rep: Got it. What do you pay each month for your plan?

Customer: I'm on Verizon and I pay $90 a month for two lines, before taxes and fees, plan only.

> Card: a verified comparison. It says honestly that T-Mobile Essentials 2.0 is $100 for two lines, $10 higher, and that this is service only, not total-bill savings.

Rep: Thanks, that helps me compare on the same basis.

Customer: Hmm. That's more than I pay now.

> Card: Too expensive. It points to real features, with no invented discount.

Rep: Fair. What matters most to you besides the price?

Customer: How much is it per line?

> Card: Customer asked, Price. The real standard prices from the catalog.

Rep: The price depends on how many lines you have. I'll confirm the exact standard price.

Customer: Is there a switching credit or something like that?

> Card: it does NOT invent a credit. It says to check eligibility and the exact terms.

Rep: I'll check what applies to your account.

Customer: I'd have to talk to my wife first.

> Card: I need to ask my spouse

Rep: Of course. Would tomorrow evening work for a quick call with both of you?

Customer: Maybe. Actually, can you just send me an email?

> Card: Send me an email

Script 2: The stop card (about 15 seconds)

Rep: Hi, this is Sam from T-Mobile, calling about a new plan.

Customer: I'm not interested. Please stop calling me.

> Red stop card: no push, confirm removal and end the call

Tips for the demo

- Pause about a second between lines so each one becomes its own bubble.
- Keep the rep's lines natural. They show off the Rep / Customer labels, and no card should appear on them.
- If a bubble is labeled wrong, click it to switch between Rep and Customer.
- Backup plan if the mic misbehaves: type the customer lines into the box at the bottom of the page.

Hackathon demo. Plans and prices come from the verified catalog in the Plan Database; the customers and calls are fictional.
