Rejection Coach: Demo Call Script

Two people read this aloud: one plays the Rep, one plays the Customer. Put the laptop mic near the speaker. Cards in pink boxes appear on screen; do not read them aloud.

Script 1: The main demo (about 90 seconds)

Rep: Hi, this is Sam from T-Mobile. Do you have a minute? I'm calling about a new plan that could save you money.

Customer: Uh, sure. But honestly, I'm happy with my current plan.

> Card: I'm happy with my current plan

Rep: That's good to hear. What do you use your phone for most?

Customer: Mostly streaming and maps. Look, my bill is already high, and I'm worried it'll go up.

> Card: Too expensive / my bill will go up

Rep: I understand. The Pink Plus plan is sixty-five dollars a month with a five-year price lock, so it can't go up.

Customer: Hmm. I'm still paying off my phone, though, and I don't want to lose my deal.

> Card: I'm still paying off my phone / I'm on a deal

Rep: Good question. Your phone payments and deals carry over unchanged.

Customer: Okay, but what's the catch?

> Card: What's the catch?

Rep: There isn't one. It's all in writing, and it takes five minutes on this call.

Customer: I'd have to talk to my wife first.

> Card: I need to talk to my spouse / family

Rep: Of course. Would tomorrow evening work for a quick call with both of you?

Customer: Maybe. Actually, can you just send me an email?

> Card: Send me an email / text me

Script 2: The stop card (about 15 seconds)

Rep: Hi, this is Sam from T-Mobile, calling about a new plan.

Customer: I'm not interested. Please stop calling me.

> Red stop card: no push, confirm removal and end the call

Tips for the demo

- Pause about a second between lines so each one becomes its own bubble.
- Keep the rep's lines natural. They show off the Rep / Customer labels, and no card should appear on them.
- If a bubble is labeled wrong, click it to switch between Rep and Customer.
- Backup plan if the mic misbehaves: type the customer lines into the box at the bottom of the page.

Hackathon demo. Pink Plus and all plan details are fictional.